

Geo-Political Perspective

By Arthur Burk

I believe we are currently involved in the next phase of God's war against humanism.

In the first round, He significantly discredited the medical industry. While the extreme anti-vax segment was vocal about their hostility to allopathic medicine, even the most sympathetic person had to come to terms with the fact that medicine fell far short of the role of our savior in the crisis.

Now we have a war and the majority of the world is not directly involved, but the majority of the Western world is hugely unimpressed with their national political leaders and their responses.

So this is the second blow to the god of humanism. Not only is medicine not going to save us, but we are in a crisis that has the potential to become a nuclear conflict, and we are being led by a warren of wusses.

Another fantasy bites the dust.

Next up will be a financial crash where our vaunted economies with sophisticated central government safeguards crash and burn with catastrophic consequences.

The genius businessmen who built the mega companies won't be much of a savior for the common man when the banking systems implode.

Along the way, schools that used to have some modicum of cultural respect have embraced ludicrous levels of woke-ism. Parents are told that they have no rights to speak into their children's education or even to know what is being taught. The federal government conspires with school leaders to label engaged parents as domestic terrorists.

Not much of a flavor of school-as-our-savior there either.

The press used to be the vaunted Fourth Estate, held in high regard as a check to the federal government. They have long since prostituted their position and been reduced to shilling for whichever political hack they happen to favor.

Even the Olympics were a cheap and tawdry affair this year, as respect for leadership on the field and off, was hard to find.

So the glory of humankind, untrammled by small minded religious people and ideals, is suffering under the relentless assault of The Most High God, who governs with a rod of iron and treats humanism like a clay pot.

So what of us?

Two things.

First, we need to envision being stripped of our assets, stripped of our freedom of speech and movement, and damaged in health.

If your intimacy with God cannot survive being impoverished, wounded and imprisoned, then your Christianity is junk and you need to consider an upgrade.

Too many of the religious movements of the last generation have defaulted heavily toward reducing church to being a day spa for the Christianette's delicate soul.

We will need a faith more durable and substantive to transcend the process of God dismantling secular humanism's structures and fantasies.

Second, light shines the brightest in the darkness. In this season that has just begun, we can expect to see God raise up a few leaders who understand that their role is to broker an encounter with the Infinite God, rather than being a demi-god to the distraught and defeated.

The majority of ministries and believers are so compromised by secular and religious humanism, that God will run roughshod over them in His great breaking.

Notice that during COVID-19 there was no discernible grace of God exempting believers from the ravages of the disease, because there was little difference between Christians and non-believers in how they stewarded their health, prior to the judgment.

Going forward, sincere love of God will not in any way protect us and our loved ones from the ravages of The Almighty's war on humanism.
