

Healing Womanhood

What is the essence of womanhood?

How is it developed in a daughter?

How is it expressed outside of marriage and motherhood?

The questions seem quite straightforward, but when we try to put language to those issues, the words become vague and the ideas generalized.

This seminar is designed to pursue language for this highly important issue.

I will bring to the table what I have developed out of 30 years of listening to women share their hearts. Then we will strive to refine the models linguistically and in real life.

It is not a simple topic.

One of the core facets of the essence of womanhood is that a woman is desired, pursued, sought after. And this is also one of the most distressing experiences for most women.

How can she be seen for her essence, not her economic or sexual value?

Big questions. Valid questions.
